I remember a couple years back and Jodie was staying with Nate and I. He was down on his luck and we invited him to stay so he could get back on his feet and had a place to take his boys to spend weekends with him. And although he was down on his luck he would always come home from work and ask what did we need and would race to beat me in buying and making dinner trying to take care of us as I was trying to mother him and take care of him. He was such an unselfish man never putting himself first making sure the kids got first then the adults then himself and I would tell him dude take care of you we are ok and he tell me yea not gonna happen but if you'd like to go rest I'll get dishes done faster and I'd just laugh and stand in the way then he would laugh and move me lol he was funny, loving, caring, always good things to say about the people he knew. His family was his world he never could express enough how much he loved all his kids and how proud he was of them. I'm so glad and blessed we always stayed friends but always introduced each other as family and now that's how it will stay. He is family and I'm happy he is part of my extended family. Thank you cuzz for the time we got with you I'll never take it for granted, this world was a better place with you in it.....R.I.P. Love you always
